

The Hardware Store

The Hardware Store are the unquiet soul of today's music. They hate extremes so they try not to scream, they are sick of mediocrity so they will surprise you in the middle of what you thought was a chorus. Forgetful of the meaning of genre or style, they fish out handfuls of grooves from jams.

Four members, all with so different musical histories from each other, that the only way they found to sedate quarrels has been not to create something unique that could satisfy each one of them, but instead something so free that could open a crack on what music can become. Bringing a mix of Rock, Blues, Funky, Jazz, and Indie.

This band loves to soil its hands, it absorbs the grease and filth of this society, and turns it into monuments to free thinking. Tirelessly committed both on creating and diffusing their message, they hate those who call music a product, and having seen for themselves what dealing with these accountants for artists means, they decided to renounce this to a downward spiral. Break the fences, it's time to create.

The actual formation dates back to summer 2007 in Messina, Sicily, a small, provincial city at the borders of a racked and ruined kingdom. Grown up in a sterile environment, except for some rare and still extraordinary exception, the four members isolate themselves from the world to condense into music the atmospheres, the feelings, the blues that each one of them feels, hatred and anger, wishes, longings and restlessness.

The line-up is untouchable, it has always been so, music comes from it, not from the instruments or the musicians, but from the individuals, those individuals that bring the joy and pain of the world inside the soundproof walls, that is what makes music unique.

There debut album "Out of Service" is out now. An album which has been composed in less than an year, that wishes to present the two sided soul of this strange thing that I must call band for lack of a better term.

As a dream, you will find yourself between love and hate, sensuality and violence, carelessness and blues, you will fall in love, but you will not know with who, if with dr Jekyll or with mr Hyde, puzzled you will follow bit by bit this mad mosaic made of impressions and visions until its end.

I assure you, you are going to want some more. You will see princes and bushmen, heartbreakers and tramps, masters and drunkards, you will resound of excitement and discomfort, asking yourselves what the hell were you listening to before meeting The Hardware Store.

Ready to take to the world The Hardware Store has now signed a global deal with indie power house "Blue Pie" www.bluepie.com.au.
